Cayey is an important inland town, 2,300 feet above the sea. It is about 17 miles from San Juan, on the military road running from there to Ponce, and is east of Albonito. During the Spanish-American War, Cayey was about to be attacked, when news was received of the signing of the protocol.

Place de Bronckere. Here is shown one of the many fine open spaces of Brussels, around which are some very handsome buildings and a splendid park. It is situated to the north of the city, and is one of the most beautiful up to date, but full of interest.
